THE GOOD SEA MONSTER.

THE GOOD SEA MONSTER.

N an island of rocks out in the ocean lived a sea monster. His head was large, and when he opened his mouth it looked like a cave.

It had been said that he was so huge that he could swallow a ship, and that on stermy nights he sat on the rocks and the flashing of his eyes could be seen for miles around.

The sailors spoke of him with fear and trembling, but, as you can see, the sea monster had really been a friend to them, showing them the rock in the storm by flashing his eyes; but because he looked so hideous all who beheld him thought he must be a cruel monster.

One night there was a terrible s.orm and the monster went out into the ocean to see if any ship was wrecked in the night, and if possible help any one that was floating about.

He took them to a cave on the island and when he returned and again he opened his mouth. Ko-ko walked in this time without waiting and he found boxes and barrels of food, which he stored away in the seep.

Ko-ko walked in this time without waiting and he found boxes and barrels of food, which he stored away in the seep.

Ko-ko cooked his dinner and then he awoke the monster shook his head and plunged into the ocean. He soon returned with his mouth full of fish. Then Ko-ko knew that the monster shook his head and plunged into the ocean to see if any ship was wrecked in the night, and if possible help any one that was floating about.

"I wish you could talk," he said.

"I can," the monster replied. "No one wished it before. An old witch changed me into a monster and put me on this island, where no one could wash and the only way I can be Ko-ko cooked his dinner and then he awoke the monster, and said, "Dinner is ready," but the monster shook his head and plunged into the ocean. He soon returned with his mouth full of fish. Then Ko-ko knew that the monster had brought all the things from the sunken ship for him, and he began to wish that the monster could talk, for he no longer feared him.

"I wish you could talk," he said.

"I can," the monster replied. "No one ever wished it before. An old witch changed me into a monster and put me on this island, where no one could reach me, and the only way I can be restored to my original form is for some one to wish it."

"I wish it," said Ko-ko.

"You have had your wish," said the monster, "and I can talk; but for me to become a man some one else must wish it."

The monster and Ko-ko lived for a long time on the island. He took Ko-ko for long ridge on his back, and when

The monster and Ko-ko lived for a long time on the island. He took Ko-ko for long rides on his back, and when the waves were too high and Ko-ko was afraid, the monster would open his mouth and Ko-ko would crawl inside and be brought back safe to the island. One night, after a storm, Ko-ko saw something floating on the water, and he jumped on the monster's back and they swam out to it.

If proved to be a little girl about Ko-ko's age, who had been on one of the wrecked vessels, and they brought her to the island.

At first she was afraid of the monster.

If a member of the family desires to give to the high school girl a present that will be theroughly appreciated and which will help to get her to school on time, a small gold-filled watch for a girl or lady is marked as low as $7.50 in a jewelry store in Seventh street near D. This watch was daintily chased and was guaranteed to keep excellent time. There was a gold-filled hunting case watch in the window which would please anybody, and it was only $10.75. The works were of the well-known Elgin make.

A woman does not often have a chance to buy a pretty silk chiffon waist lined with messaline satin and elaborately trimmed for $6. I saw waists for this trimmed for $6. I saw waists for this price in a store in F street, between Twelfth and Thirteenth, this morning which were genuine bargains. There was one made of a heavy silk chiffon over a brown Persian satin lining and trimmed with the smallest black satin buttons, which was just about as artistic and pretty a waist as a woman could purchase. There were waists in brown, gray, and blue duaped over satin linings and trimmed with beads, net, embroidered silk patterns, and many other new and novel ways, and each waist was marked $6.

In a department store in Seventh street, near New York avenue, I saw some mercerized damask table cloths, in pretty fleur de lys and clover patterns, which were marked 8 cents each. They were hemstitched, and long enough for use on a six-foot dining-room table.
